PLANTING AND CULTURE. It does not necessarily imply that all growers of Gladiolus are experts in their particular line. However there are a few points that are very important in growing Gladiolus which we follow and get very good results.

PLANTING. First select a fairly rich soil free from shade and the shadows of buildings. Soil can be of sand, or sandy clay loam mixture for best results. For best results the deeper you spade the longer the roots grow and taller the spike becomes. For early flowers plant just as soon as the danger from frost is past. Plant 6 inches deep in sand and 4 inches in clay soil or clay mixture loam. If fertilizer is deemed necessary use pulverized sheep manure or bone meal, not too freely in trench before planting bulbs. Nitrate of soda can also be used successfully as follows on soil that is not up to standard. Care must be exercised. Take one tablespoonfull of nitrate of soda in 2 gallons of water to each dozen plants. Apply to soil near the rows about every 10 days. This will help greatly; or sprinkle nitrate of soda on the ground, rake in, and water thoroughly. Cultivate often to hold the moisture in soil. Deep spading ensures greater root growth, which in turn will produce a better spike, flower and bulb.
